Crafted fellowship programs - today's need

1. Fellowship details
2. Medical and surgical background
3. Research interest
4. How to provide maximum support?
5. How it will ultimately benefit the hospital and the society?

Summary

Crafted fellowship is current need for the Ophthalmologist. It inspects each ophthalmologist individually and then program is designed according to individual previous medical knowledge, surgical skill and social responsibility. Furthermore, interest in research should be considered and then providing suitable infrastructure for the same. Even though, now all hospitals have structured programs but it is a good idea to keep all fellows in the same race. At IIEI AND H, fellowship programs are designed to cover individual needs with details medical and surgical exposure. All fellows are assessed while joining the fellowship individually and according to that a balanced training is scheduled. It helps in building confidence in the fellow which is reflected in his work in OPD and OT. Every fellow is assigned with different mentors in a designed way according to their experience. It helps in more exposure and learning new techniques from different masters. As the hospital is having huge surgical turnover, surgical exposure for the fellow is vast. During the program, every fellow is exposed to all kinds of surgeries and it was made sure that he can do the almost every surgery independently at the end of the fellowship.
